Announcement

¶ The most important portion of this issue is found in the department of Documents where is begun the Journal of Occurrences at Nisqually House. The first settlement of white men on Puget Sound is recorded in daily entries. The Quarterly is indebted to Clarence B. Bagley for the opportunity of presenting this valuable source material.

¶ The Quarterly is fortunate in the possession of two friends, each in his ninetieth year and each a pioneer of Washington Territory — General James C. Strong and Major Junius Thomas Turner. Both are mentioned and one has a brief article in this issue.

¶ The Book Reviews reveal the fact that Edward S. Curtis has reached the half way station in his monumental publication — The North American Indian.

¶ Patriotic Societies in the Northwest are arousing an increased interest in the marking of historic sites.
